

Is This An Internet Scam?

You know what, I used to be incredibly defensive around this question because for me it was an insult. It was kind of a “how dare you even suggest that this industry, this business or our company is some sort of scam?” But I’m a little bit older and wiser and a lot more mature these days and completely respect the fact that it’s a very legitimate question.

Now the first bit of advice I’m going to give you is that when you’re going to invest money on the internet, especially if it’s on your education and you’re expecting a service back, don’t part with your money to start with if there’s no refund period or guarantee. That’s a true sign that something’s fishy, something’s not right. And I think that the only way for you to make a decision on anything today in this internet world is by going through an experience yourself. The advantage you have when you have a refundable guarantee period, is that you get to experience whether this is actually adding value. I think that’s the only way that you’re ever going to be able to make a wise decision on anything because I’m obviously going to tell you what I think about the industry and what I think about our company.

The only way you will ever know for yourself is by judging the experience that you have. Is the education what you expected, is the support promised being provided, are you making progress- that kind of thing. You know, with us you get your thirty (30) day absolute no questions asked refund period so you get to actually feel and experience everything before you get started. And I’ll say that that’s the advice you apply to anything that you’re checking out online. The other thing that I will say on the other side of the coin when it comes to the internet is you’re going to get what you look for. And what I mean by that is if you’re researching a particular restaurant or a particular hotel and you’re looking for the negative review or you’re looking for the reasons not to go and stay at a particular resort or hotel, you’re going to find what you’re looking for. If you go and look for rave reviews about a particular restaurant, if you go and look to find rave reviews about a particular authority figure- an expert- you’re going to find the rave reviews. So, in the internet you’ve got to understand that you find what you look for. So I don’t think it’s always a fair way to judge any particular product or service or industry on that matter. For us it’s normally people researching the industry of internet marketing or affiliate marketing, that kind of thing, and I can tell you now there are people out there that are complete naysayers about affiliate marketing- for example- they say it doesn’t work anymore- it’s broken. But these kinds of things are coming from people who have never had success in the industry, they will never have success in the industry and frankly, they spend most of their time out there, you know, being trolls on the internet.

So, you know, the key thing is don't take my word, don't take any of our affiliate's words for anything. You have to judge everything based on your own experience and, of course, the value that you receive from any particular company. Keep an eye out for guarantees and refunds and then you probably can't go too far wrong because if something doesn't meet your expectations you can obviously get your money back.
